THE SEWANEE REVIEW.

---

THE UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH,

SEWANEE, TENNESSEE, October 1, 1900.

With the October, 1900, number, THE SEWANEE REVIEW closes its eighth year, and with the issue of January, 1901, the ninth volume will begin. For nearly eight years under the direction of Professor W. P. Trent, THE SEWANEE REVIEW has achieved an honorable position, and, it is believed, fulfilled a mission. The effort of the present editors, Professors J. B. Henneman and B. J. Ramage, will be to maintain and advance the high standard and character of the contributions in the domain of literary study, history, and criticism, and in the discussion of pressing economical and sociological problems. Believing that in the sphere of thought and letters there can be nothing sectional and partisan, THE SEWANEE REVIEW seeks to extend its influence by representing, in the highest and widest sense, the best and the most recent life and thought and culture of the South and of our country.

Your subscription and kindly interest are respectfully solicited. Each number contains 128 large octavo pages, printed in bold type on fine paper, and the dates of issue are January, April, July, and October, of each year. Subscription, $2.00 per annum; single numbers, 50 cents. Advertising rates and trade discount will be made known on application.

A few complete sets, Volumes I to VIII, remain on hand, and can be sold to libraries at a special price.
